The book tour of the Association for the Support of Iranians Living in Albania (ASILA) was held in Përmet, Albania. Members of ASILA exhibited the books published by the association.

In order to develop cultural relations between Iran and Albania and to enlighten Albanian citizens about the true nature of the Mujahedin-e Khalq, ASILA members including their Albanian director Mr. Dashamir Mersuli traveled to Përmet to donate the books to the citizens.

As an active member of ASILA, Miranda Mersuli the wife of Dashamir presented explanations about the books and introduced the authors of two of the books who are former members of the MEK, Rahman Mohammadian and Khalil Ansarian. They eventually would sign their autobiographies and donate them to the visitors.

The MEK, widely loathed by Iranians

By Cristina Maza – The National Journal

An Iranian political-militant group previously on the U.S. list of foreign terrorist organizations now has an outsized influence in Washington.

On a grey December day on a patch of grass near the Dirksen Senate Office Building in Washington, a small group of protesters stood chanting. Waving flags and carrying posters with photographs of people who died in Iran over the past three months of anti-regime demonstrations, the protesters called for revolution and “regime change in Iran by the people of Iran.” The photographs of the regime’s victims outnumbered the people demonstrating on the Capitol grounds.

“The Mojahedin are not the soul of our revolution” is the title of an interview published in the Italian newspaper, il Manifesto. Francesca Luci of the Manifesto interviewed an Iranian 28-year-old activist named Nazanin, holding a PhD in political science with specific studies on Iranian opposition organizations in the diaspora. The talk was on the role of the Mujahedin-e Khalq in Iranian political developments.

Nazanin argues about the MEK’s growing role abroad. But not at home: “Divided by gender, veiled women: they don’t fight for women’s freedom but for power.”

December 19, 2022

Dr. Olsi Jazexhi interviews Hassan Heyrani, an Iranian defector of MEK who has been put under administrative detention from Edi Rama's government since November 8, 2022.

Hassan Heyrani, Mehdi Soleymani, Reza Shekari, Ehsan Bidi, Hassan Shahbazi and Ali Hajari have been placed in administrative detention by Albania police with no excuse.

Hassan Heyrani explains the horrible conditions in the camp of Karrec, where they do not have enough food, no heating, are not allowed to meet their family members and are not allowed even to take medicines to cure themselves. While Maryam Rajavi and the MEK command would have wished to have Hassan and his friends killed for abandoning them, the government of Edi Rama is killing the Iranian defectors slowly:
