

Conference of Nejat Society Albania in Pogradec

June 11, 2025

Nejat Society Albania, held a conference in Pogradec, Albania to convey the voices of mothers and families of members of the Mujahedin-e Khalq (MEK). The conference was organized through the efforts and interest of Ms. Eshpersa, head of the Association of Intellectual Women in Albania.

The conference, which had been advertised the day before by distributing brochures by Albanian members of Nejat Society, was attended by about a hundred Albanian women and mothers.

At the entrance to the conference venue, photos, cartoons, and letters from languishing mothers were attracting attention. The conference began at 9:30 a.m. welcoming the participants, with the presence of three Albanian TV stations and about a hundred female participants.

The Incredible Disappearing of the MEK

June 22, 2025

Michael Rubin, an American journalist critical of the Islamic Republic and a staunch opponent of the Mujahedin-e Khalq (MEK), believes that Israel's attacks on Iran and its plan to change for regime change are the causes for the destruction of the MEK.

Although his analysis in his recent article in the Middle East Forum is not without flaws, his view on the nature of the MEK and his criticism on the performance of this treacherous and violent group, is worth to know:

Imagine talking about regime change for decades, hosting posh conferences that cost millions of dollars, paying five- and perhaps even six-figure honoraria to retired politicians, cabinet secretaries, and ministers from across the United States and Western world, all the while claiming that a veiled septuagenarian leader who never won an election and consistently polled with less than 1 percent support was Iran's future popular leader.

Israel cannot pave the way for MEK

June 21, 2025

To be honest, Israel's so-called preemptive strikes on Iran show that Benjamin Netanyahu has gone beyond his government's "Initiation Doctrine." According to Netanyahu's rhetoric to the Iranian nation while dropping bombs on Iranian citizens, he wants to change the Iranian regime and claims to stand with the Iranian nation.

As expected, the leaders of the MEK, as one of the opposition groups, are delighted with these fantasies. The sect's disappeared leader, Massoud Rajavi, expresses his enthusiasm for Israel's attacks on his compatriots in a new message every day. But whether the MEK really has a place in this equation is a question that an Indian journalist has addressed in the Eurasia Times.

Prakash Nanda, who seems to have a good understanding of Iranian society and the conditions of the Iranian opposition, first poses the question: "Will the Iranians respond to Netanyahu's request?" and he himself answers: "Given the history of recent unsuccessful attempts to change the regime in Tehran, it is very difficult to answer this question."

International Law, the Silence of the West and the Paradox of the Iranian Opposition (MEK)

June 23, 2025

In recent decades, the world has faced a dramatic shift in the balance of power, where the permanent conflicts in the Middle East have served as a testing ground for major geopolitical interests. In this complex mosaic, the Iranian opposition MEK (Mujahedin-e Khalq), with its contradictory history and alliances, occupies a special and worrying place. Moreover, the stance of Western countries, especially the United States of America, has served as a catalyst for the escalation of tensions and the further destabilization of the region.

CONCLUSION: THE NEED FOR JUSTICE AND DIPLOMATIC CAUTION

The world needs a sincere return to the principles of international law. States cannot support violent groups that act as temporary allies against their strategic rivals. Nor can they remain silent in the face of direct interference in the sovereignty of other states. Israel must stop the logic of aggression and fear. The MEK must understand that cooperating with a power that has bloody hands in Gaza will not make it more acceptable in the eyes of the Iranian people. And the US must wake up from its strategic silence and play the role of peacemaker rather than silent supporter of conflicts. Only then can the region have a future with less blood, more respect, and more justice.

Newsweek: MEK cult lack any significant domestic constituency

June 18, 2025

As Israel claims that its unprovoked attack on Iran is aimed at regime change, analysts wonder which opposition group may be able to take over Iran after the so-called regime change. In this case, the MEK and the Monarchists are the two main oppositions to be analyzed.

Tom O'Connor, Senior Writer of the Newsweek suggests that "as Israel eyes regime change, Iran's opposition is divisive and divided."

In case of the MEK, he quotes Ali Alfoneh, senior fellow at the Arab Gulf States Institute in Washington. Alfoneh told Newsweek, "The NCRI/MEK, which relocated to Iraq and collaborated with the Iraqi Army throughout the war against Iran, has been reduced to a cult-like political sect lacking any significant domestic constituency."

My Aslan... Come Home

June 3, 2025

Soraya Abdollahi is the mother of one of the MEK hostages. Her son Amir Aslan Hassanzadeh was recruited by the MEK agents when he was very young.

Ms. Abdollahi has been endeavoring to free Amir-Aslan from the hands of the MEK leaders, for over two decades. She has taken every kind of legal action to call on the international community for the release of their son.

She has met several authorities in Iran, Iraq, Europe and the United Nations. She has written so many letters to anyone who can do anything for them.

She has founded an NGO called "Mothers, Forgotten Victims" to help the voice of mothers of the MEK members to be heard. She has launched several campaigns to collect signatures to make Albanian government take action in order to help Ashraf residents choose for their fate.

In this video, Soraya Abdollahi recounts her ordeals with her only son captivated behind the bars of Ashraf 3 (MEK camp) in Albania.
