Amir Parvizi's family call on the Albanian prime minister for help

According to the sources in Albania, Amir Parvizi's attempt to escape the Mujahedin-e Khalq was obstructed by the group's fraudulent collaboration with Albanian Police.

His family from Zanjan, Iran took action to protest against the MEK's suppressive attitude against Amir.

Amir Parvizi who wanted to flee the group under the cover of a doctor's appointment in a hospital in Tirana was arrested by the Albanian Police and handed over to the MEK. The MEK commanders have forged documents to convince the police that Amir suffers mental disorder.

Amir's family are seriously concerned about his life-threatening condition. His brother has published a video message asking the Albanian Prime Minister to immediately intervene in the case of Amir. He stated that the Albanian government is responsible for the consequences of the MEK's inhumane attitude toward Amir.

Amir Parvizi joined the MEK in Iraq, in 2006 when he was 26 years old. He has not been allowed to leave the group until now that he is 43.

Parviz Heidarzadeh, former member of the Mujahedin-e Khalq left the group after it was relocated in Albania in 2016. He lived independently in Albania for five years and he returned to his family in north of Iran, a few months ago. He spoke on the MEK's cult-like suppressive atmosphere, in a meeting with a group of families of members of the MEK who are still mentally and physically banned under the group's propaganda and cult system in Albania. "The MEK's propaganda about its public support in Iran is totally false," he said. "They are like dinosaurs here. They are extinct. The youth do not know them at all."

Khodam Golmohammadi was from Azarbaijan, Iran. He was taken as a war prisoner in the Iran-Iraq war. The Mujahedin-e Khalq recruiters in Iraqi POW camps succeeded to convince Khodam to join the group. However, the suppressive cult-like system of the group made him regret his decision after a short time but he had no way out.

Iraj Salehi recounts the incident: "We got the news that some one was on fire in the parking. We rushed there for help. The MEK commanders, in particular Mashood Dianat, called Siamak, prevented us from getting close to the scene.."

Khodam was taken to a hospital in Baghdad and he was not seen in the MEK, anymore. Years later, the rank and file of the MEK came to know that Khodam died in Baghdad. The location of his grave is not known.

"Whether he was killed by the MEK agents or he killed himself, the Rajavis are responsible for Khodam's death," Salehi states.

June 17th, landmark date exposing the Cult of Rajavi

June 17th, 2003 is a landmark date in the history of the MEK that exposes it as a cult of personality rather than an opposition group. The arrest of the she-guru of the Cult of Rajavi by the French Police created heart-breaking but at the same time enlightening scenes by which the world was able to observe the true substance of the MEK.

Following the arrest of Maryam Rajavi, the group commanders coerced members to protest against the act of French government against their leader. The excessive part of the protests was played by a dozen of members of the group who set themselves on fire to demonstrate their devotion to their arrested leader. 21 people set themselves on fire between June 17th to June 21st. Eventually, two of them were killed.

The Fate of Child Victims of Mujahed Parents in the MEK

Political ideologies can easily influence people's daily lives. In the contemporary history of Iran, the topic of politics has been constantly remained trending both in the news and in daily conversations of people and eventually their lives. With parents as their kid's role models, they hold the biggest impact in their children's lives. Children show a tendency of picking up behaviors, words and phrases that they hear from people around them. Since kids are easily influenced by their parents, they are likely to repeat what their parents say and believe. As an extremist violent movement, the Mujahedin_e Khalq has worked in such a way that its children have been more involved in their parents' political activities than any other political movement.

A critical question on the MEK: Is it a traitor?

Many questions are asked about the Mujahedin Khalq Organization, its leaders and its background.

However, the most important question on the group seems to be this one:

Are the MeK (Mujahedin-e Khalq) traitors to their country?

The short answer is:

"Yes, they are" but the explanation is crucial because it will clarify many other facts on the group through its history.

The MEK is:

Traitor to its own country

Traitor to its own members

MKO terrorists attack exhibition on their crimes in Stockholm

Mehr News Agency

June 12, 2022

Members of anti-Iran terrorist group, Mujahedin-e-Khalq (MEK), have attacked the organizers of an exhibition held in Swedish capital of Stockholm on the group's crimes.

The MEK terrorists

slashed the banners with knives and splashed paint on them to hide their brutal crimes, while pelting the organizers with stones and eggs, in what was decried as a blatant affront to democracy and free speech, according to a report by Press TV, whose staff covering the event were also targeted.

According to Habilian, which organizes the exhibition, the notorious terrorist group had called on its elements in Sweden to get together tasked with slashing the exhibition on Thursday night.

Esmat Vatanparast called mother Esmat, defected the Mujahedin Khalq after she realized that the group agents tortured her small daughter. Mother Esmat was an active member of the MEK. She lost several members of her family for the group's cause but once she found out that the group's leaders are dishonest, she defected. Jennifer, the youngest child of mother Esmat was a teenager when she was separated from her mother, kept in Camp Ashraf, Iraq where she was forced to obey the rules of the cult-like military system of the Mujahedin. "In the MEK's school, my daughter faced a thousand issues," Mother Esmat says in an interview with Siamak Naderi.

The Avaricious Nature of Western Politicians Attending the MEK Event

The propaganda meetings of the Mujahedin-e Khalq group, known as the Kahkeshan (Galaxy), were held from 2004 to 2018 in various places in Paris, Auvers-sur-Oise (Maryam Rajavi's residence), north of Paris, or in the Villepinte.

After 2018, the group accused an Iranian diplomat of bombing this gathering and then held this propaganda meeting in the form of demonstrations or online under the pretext of Coronavirus Pandemic.

The purpose of these multimillion-dollar rallies is simply to create the impression in the audience's minds that "we exist", but if we look closely at the faces of the members of this organization in such meetings, we will notice the broken and aging organization.

Letter from the CEO of Nejat Society to the Albania PM

Nejat Bloggers

June 6, 2022

Following the hacking of Tehran's municipal systems and disruption of "My Tehran" and surveillance camera networks, the source of which was reported after an investigation to be in Albania, the CEO of the Nejat Society wrote a letter to the Prime Minister of the Albanian government in this regard. The text of the letter (briefly) is as follows:

Mr. Edi Rama Prime Minister of the Republic of Albania

On behalf of the families of the members trapped in the MEK camp in Albania, I have written many times to you and other officials of the Republic of Albania, asking to have the right to communicate with their loved ones after decades of separation and not knowing their status. But unfortunately I have not received any response so far.

The friendly advice of the families to the Albanian government is to announce, in order to show goodwill to the Iranian people, that the issuance of visas to Iranian citizens to visit their relatives in Albania, of whom they have been unaware for years, is unimpeded and thus determine their non-affiliation with a terrorist group that is hated by all Iranians.
