MEK smuggle dissident members across Europe to stop deradicalization

The recent order to inspect the properties of former members of the Mujahedin Khalq (current members of ASILA) by the Albanian Police was issued by the country's attorney general, Etleva Deda. Although the Police did not discover anything illegal in the properties of MEK defectors, the order contained a very crucial point about the MEK: Since the arrival of MEK in Albania, about 400 members have separated from it and about 300 members have illegally left Albania for EU countries. Nevertheless, the recent revelation that was made in the Albanian's inspection order and was confirmed and clarified by Mostafa Beheshti, shows that people who defect the MEK are not free from the cult's control system which is now under the ruling of Maryam Rajavi. Leaders of the Cult of Rajavi make their maximum effort to prevent defectors from deradicalization by smuggling them across Albanian border and delivering them to their agents in other European countries. By its supportive activities for former members of the group, the Association for the Support of the Iranians Living in Albania (ASILA) is actually obstructing the MEK's efforts. Indeed, as defectors come to ASILA office immediately after their escape from Camp Ashraf 3, they eventually break all of the links that attach them to the Cult of Rajavi.

Mostafa (Milad) Beheshti announced his separation from the Mujahedin-e Khalq (MEK). Mostafa Beheshti born in 1983 was recruited by the MEK agents in Turkey in 2001 when he was only eighteen years old. He was actually supposed to join his brother in Turkey but MEK recruiters smuggled him to Iraq.

Mostafa is free now. He has joined the independent defectors of the MEK living in Tirana. "Although I suffered a painful life in the MEK for many years, I will build my life with the help and empathy from my family and friends," he writes. "That nightmare has finished,"

Special Anti-Corruption Structure of the Albanian Police (SPAK) raided the Association of the Support for the Iranians Living in Albania (ASILA) and the apartments of 20 people of the Iranian members of the association.

The Albanian Police detained and interrogated them on Thursday July 14th, 2022.

However, they were freed after ten hours without being charged with any of the alleged accusations.

As the Albanian Police and media supposed that there are suspicions that espionage activities are carried out through ASILA and under the cover of cultural exchanges, no evidence was found to accuse these former members of the Mujahedin-e Khalq (MEK) of being spies.

MEK's gathering postponed – terrorist threats and conspiracies?

Nejat Bloggers

The annual gathering of the Mujahedin-e Khalq (MEK) was postponed due to what the group calls "terrorist threats and conspiracies". The group was supposed to hold its annual gathering, the so-called "Free Iran World Summit", on July 23 and 24 in Camp Ashraf 3, Albania. The MEK's official announcement did not explain from which side the terrorist threats and conspiracies would come.

The news of the postponement of the MEK's luxurious annual gathering which embraced a large number of former western politicians as well-paid speakers on behalf of the group, was proceeded by the news of the inspection of the properties of ASILA members.

What Should MeK's Supporters Know about Operation Forough-e Javidan?

Habilian Association Website

July 27, 2022

Operation Forough-e Javidan (meaning Eternal Light) is an event that left deep and long-term effects in the developments related to the Mojahedin-e Khalq Organization (MeK), not only because it took place after acceptance of the UN security council's ceasefire resolution by Iran, but due to the very nature of this event.

There are some main indicators in the Operation Forough-e Javidan and its aftermath that turned it into a black spot instead of an "eternal light" in history of the MeK.

The MeK launched a military aggression against Iran based on their leaders' completely wrong understanding of both the Iranian people and their desires and the MeK's weight and capability.

Ms. Narges Beheshti, the sister of Mostafa Beheshti, whose residence was searched by the police on Thursday and then he was taken to the police department to answer some questions, wrote a letter to the Minister of Interior of Albania, who is in charge of the police of this country.

She wrote: "It is surprising that the Albanian government does not know the true nature of Maryam Rajavi and the MEK after all these years. Such games should no longer deceive anyone and cause the Albanian police to become the toy of an illegal organization (MEK) against a legally registered association (ASILA).

Gjergji Thanasi and Olsi Jazexhi discuss the latest attacks that Maryam Rajavi, People's Mojahedin Organization of Iran are doing against their defectors in Albania. While DAESH / Jahbat al Nusra in Syria used to kill their defectors, the Mojaheden are using Albanian security officials to attack the defectors.

Olsi and Gjergji make fun of the ways how Maryam Rajavi tries to do money laundering in Albania. They even claim that even if Maryam Rajavi earns money by doing porn, she must justify the source of her income before she can deposit money in Albanian banks.

Farhad was two years old when his father went to Iran-Iraq war. This was the beginning of a prolonged separation. He was sixteen when he heard his father's voice on the phone, for the first time. He called from Germany, his voice sounded terrified and he thought that Farhad was living in a devastated Iran in which there were no schools. His father did not believe Farhad telling him that he was in grade one in high school.

The short phone call, at least, let Farhad and his family know that his father was alive. Barat, Farhad's father was taken as a war prisoner by the forces of the Mujahedin Khalq Organization. As Barat later told his mother in a shadowy visit in Turkey he had been intimidated to stay in the MEK. The mother (Farhad's grandmother) gave a photo of Farhad to his father. since then they have had no contact.
