Iranian MEK Jihadis at Christmas Mass in Tirana like Pontius Pilate Who Crucified Jesus Christ

December 28, 2019

At the mass that took place at St. Paul's Catholic Cathedral in Tirana for Christmas, be-

Mass was the head of the Iranian Jihadis, Maryam Rajavi. Behind Maryam Rajavi, in the photo published by an Albanian newspaper, is her first husband Mehdi Abrishamchi, who be-supporter of the MEK jihad against Iran. On the right of the hijab wearing Maryam is Elona Gjhebrea, former Deputy Minister of the Interior, who is also controversial for her acquaint-sides many corrupt personalities, thieves and criminals who went on to pardon sins and appear on television as good men, there were also representatives of the former terrorist Iranian Mojahedin-e Khalq organisation (MEK).

Present at the Christmas cause her second husband, Massoud Rajavi, is now dead, is apparently replacing the former.

On the left of Maryam Rajavi is the feared Communist spy, Djana Culi, who is notorious in Albania for sending the brothers Blloshmi and Genc Leke to the gallows, and who is now a fiery ance with the Habilaj clan drug gang.

Attendance by the former terrorists, former communist spies and friends of drug traffickers has been welcomed by Monsignor George Frenco. In a repetition of the biblical tragedy of Pontius Pilate and the hypocritical religious leaders who condemned Jesus Christ to the cross, Monsieur George Fren- do was happy with the pres- ence of former terrorists, spies, criminals, etc. who attended the Christmas Mass. Their presence turned the Mass into a biblical tragedy.

Knowing that Maryam Rajavi presents herself to members of her cult as the messenger of Imam Mahdi who will save Iran from Islam and the Imams, the Christmas Eve Mass in Tirana resembled messianic dust. Maryam the ‘saint’ was celebrating the day of the birth of the saint Jesus Christ in the presence of many sins and sinners.

If Christ was in the grave, the night would have been a freakshow of horror!

Hallelujah!

MEK and fuel demonstrations in Iran

December 06, 2019

After the fuel demonstrations in Iran were quashed, Iran’s right wing claimed the MEK was behind the violent unrest.

The MEK also claimed they were behind it.

Genuine opposition groups and demonstrators said they need to have the right atmosphere and conditions so that people can demand their rights without the interference of MEK, Pompeo, bullets, burning buildings and vandalism.

Commentators say that interference by MEK and such like in the protests has led to people supporting the current ruling regime or at least refusing to come out on the streets.

Western support for MEK and the demonstrations at the same time is stopping the democratic processes and the struggle of the genuine human rights organisations.

Several articles identify MEK as an artificial and insidious force interfering in the fuel protests in Iran.

It is acknowledged that ordinary Iranians are not seeking regime change but are protesting genuine grievances.

When the violence started, ordinary Iranians went home.

MEK are seen by analysts as an externally promoted force which wants to introduce extremism.

Syranizing Iran Through Recent Unrest

Mehr News Agency

December 31, 2019

Head of Iran's Passive Defense Organization Brigadier General Gholamreza Jalali said that enemies were seeking to throw Iran into disarray through the recent unrests but the Iranian nation managed to foil their plots.

Iran's Judiciary has said a number of those elements were tied to the notorious US-backed Mujahedin-e Khalq Organization (MKO) terror group, royalists as well as separatists — who were nabbed in the country's border provinces — besides members of organized groups trained towards staging of the unrest that erupted in the country after the administration increased the gasoline price in mid-November.

Jalali pointed to the role of foreign-controlled social media in the recent incidents, criticizing the populist approach of some officials who

“People understood that that the purpose of that sedition was to Syrianize Iran,” and hence people ‘quickly’ acknowledged the difference between ‘protest’ and ‘turbulence’ which resulted in wrapping up the issue in 48 hours, Jalali said.

In the MEK's black and white world, departure means expulsion

Nejat Bloggers

December 30, 2019

The “all-or-nothing” way of thinking is one of the very destructive thinking patterns that a person can have. This thinking pattern is also called “black and white thinking”. Thinking in black and white arranges the world into extremes: good and bad, yes and no.

It's like seeing only in black and white and ignoring the shades of gray in between. This thinking pattern leads the person to absolutism. Absolutism refers to ideas, phrases and words that denote totality, either in magnitude or probability. Absolutist thoughts are unqualified by nuance and overlook the complexity of a given subject.

Those who are not with us are against us!

For absolutists, there is nothing more than two possible positions. They do not admit that a person or group can have a neutral stance or could disagree in part with their position without entirely opposing them. In the cults of personality such as the Mujahedin Khalq (MEK, MKO, PMOI, Cult of Rajavi), the absolute leader is the main person to coerce members into such a thinking pattern.

In the MEK, any voice of dissent is forbidden and eventually will be silenced by any means. Based on interviews that he made with former members of the MEK, Aron Merat wrote in the Guardian that “MEK commanders systematically abused members to silence dissent and prevent defections – using torture, solitary confinement, the confiscation of assets and the segregation of families to maintain control over members”.

Members of the MEK often undergo severe punishment as soon as they express their willingness to leave the group. As the former high ranking member of the group Saeed Shahsavandi told the BBC inside the MEK's ruling system “people do not leave the group, but they are expelled from the group”. According to Shahsavandi, the organization do not tolerate any criticism. “Criticism and polyphonic ideas are not tolerated, so the dissident member is considered as traitor,” he says. “In such organizations, relationships are based on zero or one hundred, black or white, you are either a servant or a traitor.”

Absolutism of the MEK leaders explains why families of the MEK members are called mercenaries of the Iranian government just because they ask the international human rights bodies to aid them contact their children who are kept like hostages in the MEK.

As absolute powers of their ruling system, dictators suffer such personal disorder. Lack of balanced thinking make the MEK leaders fail to bring together the dichotomy of both positive and negative qualities of a phenomenon. Like other totalitarian leaders such as Stalin or Hitler, Massoud Rajavi is considered as a narcissistic personality. Narcissism is one of the popular causes of the all or nothing way of thinking.

A Narcissist devalues people, considers them worthless and thinks highly of them. Therefore his mind gradually adopts the all or nothing thinking. The narcissist thinks that things are either perfect or imperfect. Massoud Rajavi calls members as “unique gems” or “freedom fighters” as far as they obey his absolute power. As soon as a member decides to leave the group, he is labeled a “traitor” or “agent of the Iranian Intelligence”.

The duality of black and white thinking prevent the MEK leaders from realizing the truth because in reality most things can be approached from multiple perspectives. The fictional black and white world that the Rajavis have built inside their cult has a very destructive effect on the members’ lives. They are hardly ever capable of leaving the group in a normal process. There is an urgent need of human rights bodies to aid the release of the group members from the bars of the Cult of Rajavi.

Iran International TV interview with Massoud Khodabandeh

December 20, 2019

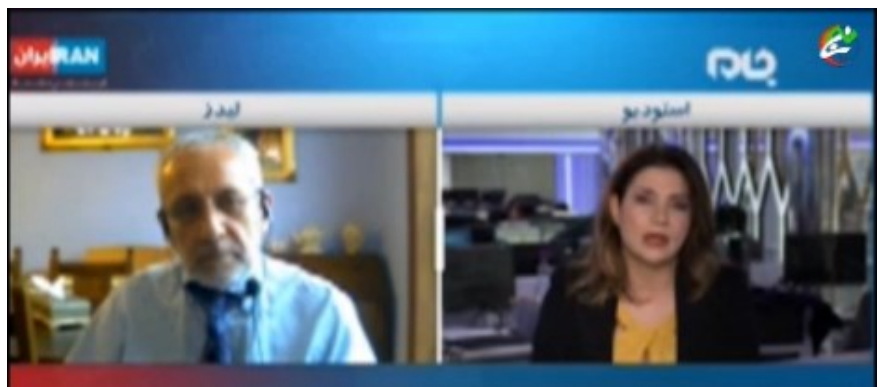

Iran International TV ran an interview with Massoud Khodabandeh about the rumour that France would be deporting Maryam Rajavi to Albania.

Khodabandeh explained that a false Tweet about this issue was sent from a hijacked official account. But the news is true and for the past year the MEK has been severely curtailed in France and elsewhere in Europe – the Villepinte rally was banned and demonstrations have been curtailed throughout Europe (MEK gatecrashed other demonstrations just to stay visible). They will eventually be deported to Albania, said Khodabandeh.

The false Tweet was either done by the far right in Iran or the far right in the West with the help of MEK. The purpose is to prevent rapprochement between France and Iran on the issue of cooperation over dealing with terrorist organisations.

Khodabandeh explained that the MEK had been brought to Albania to be deradicalized and detoxified. But the Trump administration changed this plan. By doing so, the far right on both sides rescued the MEK. But now it has come to the point that they will have to get rid of the MEK because there is irrefutable evidence that MEK have been fabricating misinformation against Iranian diplomats and creating false flag ops in Europe – in particular the Villepinte bomb plot in 2017 and similar activities in Albania, Belgium and the Netherlands.

These expose MEK as being actively involved in illegal activities, including murder and kidnapping. The security services in Europe are now working to get rid of MEK.

MEK AND ISIS ALTERNATIVES FOR IRAN?

Tom O’connor, Newsweek,

December 11 2019

Tom O’Connor writing for Newsweek highlighted the danger that the protests in Iran could be exploited by groups like ISIS, separatists and foreign governments which seek to damage Iran and even bring about regime change.

This has led to concern among analysts and activists that as unlikely as it seems, ISIS and other groups could be in a position to exploit this vacuum. This includes the MEK which is supported by senior figures in America.

The article concludes: “All three experts interviewed by Newsweek said they believed the collapse of the Iranian government was unlikely in the near future, despite the “maximum pressure” campaign by the U.S. against it.

Even for Washington, this may not necessarily be a bad thing: It has repeatedly learned that an enemy government’s loss of control often had far-reaching repercussions in the form of mass refugee flows, the formation of new, more powerful enemies, and costly military interventions to fight them.

“The fall of Iran—a nation whose population is higher than all three of those war-torn nations combined—would likely have even more devastating side effects and give ISIS and other underground forces new room to operate.”
